Joining Fond du Lac late this summer, Kenyon is coming off his freshman season at NJCAA South Suburban College. He does not throw very hard at all, but he has his own way of keeping hitters off balance. Kenyon has two unique deliveries that he alternates between on the mound. In Delivery A, he goes with a traditional high leg kick and three-quarter arm slot. This is used for his four-seam fastball and his big-breaking curveball. In Delivery B, he starts by lowering his shoulders, going into a small leg kick and a full sidearm delivery. He uses this for a sinker and a slider. He is most effective out of Delivery B, hitters have had trouble picking up the movement of the sinker, especially as it differs from his standard four-seam. Kenyon does throw mostly fastballs, so it should be safe to hunt those early in the count. Instead of being thrown off by the two deliveries, just take it as a hint of what is to come. I recommend looking for fastballs and allowing his delivery to tell you exactly how the pitch will move.
